Nelson™ Swag Leg Desk and Tables

A SIGNATURE SHAPE

In typical George Nelson style, the design brief for what would become the swag leg group was deceptively simple: “Wouldn’t it be beautiful to have some kind of sculptured leg on a piece of furniture?” Then came the challenges. Make the legs of metal, machine formed and prefinished. And design them for quick assembly. Using pressure to taper and curve a metal tube—swaging—proved the best way to produce the legs. Inserting a screw in the legs and rotating them in opposite directions made quick work of assembly. In 1958, everything came together to make a desk and tables in sizes that are right for home or office.

George Nelson

Beyond the dining table and chairs shown, the Nelson swag leg group includes a desk and work table.

STYLES FOR MANY USES

The desk’s size is right for today’s compact electronics. The accompanying work table provides area for spreading things out. And because all work and no time for relaxing bored George Nelson, he made sure his swag leg group included dining tables in round and rectangular styles.

STRENGTH AND STABILITY

Legs screw together to make a strong joint. Solid walnut stretchers bolt to the legs to complete the stable, durable base common to the desk and tables.

MADE FOR QUICK ASSEMBLY

As with the original design, the swag leg tables and desk come ready to assemble to make shipping easy and economical.
